SCHUMER DEMANDS END OF DELAY IN IMPLEMENTATION OF LAW REQUIRING 'BACKUP CAMS' IN ALL NEW CARS – ESTIMATED THOUSANDS OF CHILDREN EACH YEAR ARE NEEDLESSLY HURT OR KILLED WHEN CARS ACCIDENTLY BACK OVER THEM, BUT D.O.T. HAS DELAYED CONGRESSIONALLY MANDATED RULE FOR OVER 4 YEARS

Schumer Joined By Mother Who Accidently Ran Over 3 Year Old Daughter And Who Has Been Crusading To End DOT Delays

In 2007 Congress Mandated That New Cars Be Fitted With Backup Cameras by 2011, But DOT Has Delayed Implementation of The Rule – Just Last Month Agency Pushed Deadline Back Again, Until 2015

Each Year, Advocates Estimate That Thousands of Children and Thousands of Adults Are Severely and Needlessly Injured Due To Accidents That Would Be Avoided With Backup Cameras

New York, NY –U.S. Senator Charles E. Schumer today called for an end to delays in implementing a congressionally mandated rule to set a rear visibility for all newly manufactured vehicles. Congress passed legislation in 2008 that was interpreted as requiring rearview cameras to start being installed in all new cars by 2011, but that date has been pushed back time and time again, first by the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) and then by the Department of Transportation (DOT). Advocates estimate that at least 200 people die and 17,000 people are injured each year in predictable and preventable “backover” crashes. Forty-four percent of those killed are children younger than age 5. In June, the Department of Transportation pushed the deadline back for yet another 18 months to the beginning of 2015, the longest delay yet. Schumer said that this additional delay is totally unacceptable, and that the rule should be in place in the first months of next year.

Schumer was joined by Susan Auriemma, who inadvertently backed over her 3-year-old daughter in her driveway in 2005. Schumer was also joined by Bill and Adriann Nelson, whose 16-month old son was accidentally run over in 2004 by a family member in their home driveway.

“Turns out that one of the most dangerous places for a child to be is in the family driveway,” said Schumer. “Auto manufacturers can shine a light on this blind spot so that no one has to go through the horrible ordeal the Auriemma family and the Nelson family has gone through. Congress passed a law requiring these lifesaving cameras 5 years ago – DOT needs to stop throwing up roadblocks and put the car into drive.”

“I never thought something like this could ever happen to me or my family,” stated Susan Auriemma. “I knew children could not be seen behind vehicles and thought I had taken all the necessary precautions to prevent any of my children from being backed over. But, after leaving my then three-year-old daughter in my home supervised by an adult, she decided she wanted to come with me suddenly darted out of our home and behind my SUV as I backed out of my driveway. Fortunately, my daughter survived, and with that I was resolute to help ensure these tragedies don’t continue to befall other families. Further delays in issuing the safety standard are unacceptable and unnecessary,” she continued.

Adriann and Bill Nelson, with their 5 children, also joined Schumer. Their 6th child, Alec at the age of 16-months was backed over and killed by a relative in their home driveway. Bill Nelson said, “After over a dozen trips to Washington, DC, press conferences and hundreds of interviews, it is dismaying that we need to be here again, fighting for a law that was passed with bi-partisan support over 5 years ago. As we continue to tell our story about how our precious little Alec lost his life over and over again, it breaks our heart to know that all children continue to be at risk.”
